PROTESTART UNITY .- There were 1,500 members, coming from 141 societies. There were 187 delegates from the United States, representing 58 societies; 27 from Canada, representing 10 societies; 2 from the colonies, representing 2 societies; 24 from the Continent, representing 17 societies; while 54 English, Scotch and Irish societies were represented among the 1,300 British delegates and members. The conference atood as an object lesson of the vital unity of Protestanism. Great diversity in method was frankly avowed. But a unifying and uniting purpose was quietly assumed as the sufficient ground for meeting to discuss in common the burning problems of modern missionary work. Face to face missionaries were brought—the narrow and the broad, the sanguine and the discouraged; they were all there to prepare themselves more fully to preach with power and effectiveness the missarchable riches of Christ. They were united because they had a common work.—Unristian Union. There were 187 delegates from the

Many great fields are yet wholly unoccupied. Corea is about to open to unreserved freedom of communication. How shall these great fields be occupied for God, with the smallest waste of meaned.

A Common Faira .- There was an inspiration and power in the personal presence of this vast assembly of good men and women of nearly every section of the evangelical churches of Chrisof the evange car courones of Chris-tendom for the one purpose of con-ferring together for the propagation of the gospel throughout all nations. They had no other end in view. They were now all one in Christ Jesus. There were no vagaries of theory or of prac-tice, no innovations upon the one old and common faith, no disposition to depart from it, and, a firm and upan-ingus determination to stand by it, and there was an enthusiasm, tempered and the Holy Ghost which dominated every meeting and seemed to fire all hearts.—Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, D. D. in The Independent.

NO NEW DEPARTURE.

As the result of this conference there will be no "new departure" in missie: ary methods, except as all language and literature is a departure from the alunabet. The basal character of evapgedizing operations in the last century, chief among which is the rendering of sacred Scriptores into nearly three hundred forsign tongues, was impressed upon us with new force. It took nearly a hundred years to introduce the authorized version of the English Bible into accepted English use. What stupandous possibilities lie in the opening of the oracles of God to the peoples of the crath—a work that will never demand repetition, for the God who has preserved the English Bible and made it the visalizing force in the best modern thought and literature in the Oction will likewise with it wake the torpore of the Oriant.—Rev. to name individuals; their presence and participation were of the highest value. The floor was generously opened to missionaries from all lands and so dettes, to the great advantage of the conference. The popular meetings in the evenings were the least interesting: the great questions of missionary con-ity, education, caste, and polygamy, medical and woman's work. Islam and the heathen icligious—these over-shadowed mere geographical addresses it was a privilege simust infinite to share this great conversation, sithough its vastness made it seem for the time disappointing. The world cannot but be the better than it has been, and its volumes of report will be the mission-ary cyclopedis of this decade,—Rev. W. H. Beidee, in the Everngeist.

FRUITS VAR BEAUDING. The results of this conference cannot be tabulated in figures or stated in precise form; but they will be far reaching and lasting, because they are spiritualeven as the forces at work were spiritus! They may not be seen at once, not the impulse given to 1 500 Christian man and women during these ten days of wor hip and work will be horne by them to all the ends of the earth and will hasten the glad day of the world's evangelization and of the Lord's return.
